SOCIETIES MEET IN IRISH DRIVE

Will Protest British Rule at Gatherings in Greater
Boston Sunday

Protest meetings against England's continued rule over Ireland will be embodied in resolutions scheduled to be passed at meetings in all sections of the State tomorrow held in the interests of the Irish land certificate drive, according to information given out today at the quarters of the American Commission on Irish Independence.

Every Irish organization which meets in and about Boston tomorrow will, it is stated, pass similar resolutions, which will be forwarded to Massachusetts members of Congress. Action will also be taken on the proposition of the State officers of the Friends of Irish Freedom to hold a parade in Boston to mark the close of the Irish land certificate drive.

Meetings in the interest of the drive will be held in Amesbury and East Weymouth tomorrow afternoon and evening.

Mount Benedict Council, Knights of Columbus, of Somerville, voted to buy a $100 bond. Marjorie Council, Mount Benedict Council, voted to buy a $100 bond. Many members of these councils bought $10 bonds. A special circular has been sent out by Mount Benedict Council calling attention to a meeting to be held under the auspices in Knights of Columbus Hall, Central street and Highland avenue, Somerville, Saturday evening, April 15, at which William J. Shanahan will speak on the subject of "What the Irish Have Done for Civilization." Other speakers will be Thomas M. Nolan and James W. Keogh. The council has 1,200 members, most of whom have bought bonds.

Leather Hosiery Union, Local No. 28, of Boston, subscribed for a $100 bond. Several members pledged themselves to buy bonds of that denomination. Judge Daniel F. Cohan of the New York Supreme Court asks supporters of the Irish land drive in Massachusetts to impress upon people of all nationalities that "there is no religious question in the politics of Ireland, save as it is reflected by or through the government of England."

Michael Davitt Branch

to Honor Martyr's Memory

Michael Davitt Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, will commemorate the memory of the Irish martyr of Easter week of 1916 with a meeting tomorrow evening in Paul Memorial Hall, No. 3 Appleton street.

The meeting will open promptly at 8 p. m. with the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner" and the "Soldiers' Song" of Ireland.

The speakers will be the Rev. Philip J. O'Donnell, pastor of St. James parish; John F. Harrigan, vice mayor; Patrick J. Moynihan, of Boston; Attorney Michael Ryan, of New York; and John P. O'Reilly, of New York. The first president of the "Irish" of Irish Freedom in Massachusetts, John P. O'Reilly, representative Patrick J. Moynihan, John P. Clancy and Thomas F. Phelan of the Boston Irish American, Mayor James M. Curley will be the principal speaker on the occasion of the Irish martyrs. Musical and vocal talent will be contributed by Shanon O. Nolan, Fred L. Hatching, Miss Agnes Clancy, Alfred Healy, Miss Mary E. O'Rourke, Miss Josephine O'Rourke, Miss Teresa M. Donald, Rose Nolan and Margaret O'Connell. Patrick O'Connor and Mary O'Connor will render the "Soldiers' Song."

Patrick P. Hastings will preside. The committee of arrangements comprises John V. Neary, Edward J. Dalton, Patrick J. Cassidy, Martin J. Judge, Martin J. Neary, James J. O'Connor, Patrick J. McDevitt, William J. O'Sullivan, Michael J. O'Reilly, Austin P. O'Malley, Kathleen McKinnon, Thomas Trehan, Mrs. M. F. McCarthy, Miss Kathleen Murphy, Miss Elizabeth Lombard and Patrick McGowan.

THE ancient Romans were apparently fond of the Ursula (she-bear); and, many of the maculose and feminine names originating from them were derived from the bear in the terms for animals. One of these is Ursula, which comes from the Roman Ursus, meaning bear.

Ursus, as a proper name was popular in early times among the Romans and Gallic bishops, but it has passed from the pole to the pole star which made Ursula (little bear) furnish the name of the heroine of the curious legend of Cologne, that has passed for a thousand years, who on her way to her betrothed, was slain by a sea monster, and was thrown on the German coast, and claimed by Attila, King of the Huns, who carried her off to his capital, where the skulls of the maidens are shown at Cologne, and their crimson hair has been followed by the fairies.

Anecdotes of the Famous

The famous French artist, Gustave Doré, was born and reared in the shadow of Strasbourg Cathedral, says Mrs. Betham-Edwards. "In the heart of the Vosges."

"At the age of eight years he broke his right arm, but became, as by magic, ambidextrous. As he lay in bed he cheerily drew pictures all day long with his left hand."

"At ten years of age he witnessed a grand public ceremony. Strasbourg celebrated the inauguration of a monument to Gutenberg, and the Mayor, the Bishop, the Governor and Mayor. Fifteen cars represented the industrial corporations of the city: each was symbolically adorned, and each rode men, women and children dressed in the costume of the fifteenth century. Among the corporations were the Peintres-Verriers, or painters on stained glass, and their car proved especially attractive to one small looker-on.

"Inspired by the color and movement of the fete, the child determined to repeat the performance on a smaller scale. Cars, costumes, banners and decorations were all designed by this boy of ten.

With the approval of his teachers and the collaboration of his school-fellows, the Dore procession, consisting of four highly-decorated cars, drawn by boys, defied before the college authorities and made the round of the cathedral, with the youthful impresario at its head. The car of the painters on glass was conspicuously elaborated—a star design from one of the cathedral windows bore the words, 'G. Dore, fecit.'" selection.

Then she laughed scornfully.

"Doria will not 'await her love' or anyone else if it is going to make her uncomfortable to do so!" she muttered. "Oh, poor Hugh—my poor Hugh!"

The possessive pronoun slipped from her lips without her volition and she clenched her hands.

"I am 'my' poor Hugh's wife. But he is not 'my' anything. And he is not Doris' either. Once he was my friend. I had a right to call him that. Now I shall never be anything to him. I shall never be the woman who fooled him and persuaded his family into aiding and abetting her in her deception.

"I meant to help him. I meant to save him from suffering. I hoped in spite of my own convictions that Doris would see her mistake. But it's too late now."

Ruth Has Fears

"To be sure, Hugh is getting stronger—thank Heaven! But what will he care for his health when he learns that Doris will never belong to him? He might have stood his blindness with her to help him. Now he will have lost his sight—his life. And I will have been instrumental in saving him for such a fate as that. Oh—how he will hate his life—and me!"

A full hour had passed after Raip Norton's departure when Mrs. Courtney called her daughter. "Doris, are you here? Are you downstairs, still?"

Ruth opened the library door. "Yes, mother," she called back. "I am in here to read."

"Doris thought you were in your room, but I thought not," Mrs. Courtney informed her. "Come up to my room, my dear. We want to speak to you. And by the way, put on your hat while you are down there, will you? Doris quite forgot about them."

Something in the mother's tone made the daughter's heart stand still. Her mother was making an adept at concealment when she was emotionally stirred, and her voice quivered with agitation. Yet surely Doris would not be deceived.

Hastily Ruth Courtney extinguished the lights in the library, drawing room and hall, and went upstairs. She must know the worst at once.

As she entered her mother's room she saw Doris standing there, fore-

"Ruth—we have great news for you my dear! Ruth's leaving her said Ruth, "Ruth—for she is en-

Actually Engaged

"Engaged?"

Ruth repeated the word incredulously.

"Engaged? You mean, Doris, that you are actually engaged to Ralph Norton—already?"

"Test! Of course. I mean just that!" Doris declared.

Her rippling laugh was as nat-before. "I don't see how it could be the cause of any suffering."

"In plain English, Ruthie, I have loves me and I love him, and I have

Ruth wet her dry lips with her tongue, as if she must do something to end this awful numbness that seemed to hold her fast.

"I don't see how it could be any near," she heard herself say.

Her thoughts sprang back suddenly to where she had been.

From the same sentence to Doris, with the same pain at her heart, but then the pain had been for herself. Now it was for the man who in that other night had been so happy, so young and so handsome. He wanted to cry aloud, to protest against the horror of this thing, but she must control herself.

"Kiss your sister, Ruth," she heard her mother insisting. "You look as surprised as if you had not suspected that Ralph was in love with Doris."

Ruth kissed her sister before replying to her mother's remark.

"Why, yes—I did know Ralph Barton was in love with Doris. But I did not know that Doris was quite

She paused and Doris completed the sentence for her.

"That I was sure I loved him? Well, I was not until tonight. But now I know, and I can never doubt again. He is the only man in the world I could ever love enough to marry."

AN OPERA BEAUTY ON VISIT TO BOSTON

Lydia Lipkowska, an opera beauty, is visiting Boston. She is a Polish soprano and has been singing in the Metropolitan Opera House in New York. She is now singing in the Boston Symphony Hall. She is a very beautiful woman and has a very sweet voice. She is a very popular singer and has many fans. She is a very talented singer and has a very good voice. She is a very beautiful woman and has a very sweet voice. She is a very popular singer and has many fans. She is a very talented singer and has a very good voice.

Lydia Lipkowska will introduce a curious innovation at her concert in Symphony Hall Sunday evening. She will wear a wig of silver threads, a very lovely affair to lend atmosphere to her group of French songs, and a wig of gold wires to give proper tone, in her opinion, to a group of glowing Russian numbers, as well as which have never been sung in Boston. Lipkowska's concert will bring forward Jacques Hoffmann as assistant artist, who will play two groups. She has announced the following numbers:

- 1. Les Chansons (Ball Song), from Les Chansons de France, by Claude Debussy.
- 2. Les Chansons (Ball Song), from Les Chansons de France, by Claude Debussy.
- 3. Les Chansons (Ball Song), from Les Chansons de France, by Claude Debussy.

GORDON'S OLYMPIA
When Howard Chandler Christy declared that Katherine Macdonald's title, "The most beautiful woman in the world," was a compliment to her beauty by saying it represented the glory of a dauntless character, he little thought that Macdonald's next story would enable her to make a role of this nature. In "The Turning Point," the latest attraction of The American Beauty, which will be shown at Gordon's Olympia, commencing Monday, Miss Macdonald plays the part of Plank Tennant.

VOLUNTARY TRAINING
AMENDMENT ADOPTED

LANCASTER THEATRE
There is certain to be a generous response to the appeal of the excellent bill of photography announced for the week at the Lancaster Theatre. For the first half there will be shown Max Allison in a charming role as the leading player in "The Walk-Offs" and Robert Warwick in "Jack Straw."

CHORAL PENSION FUND CONCERT
For the Pension Fund Concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be given in Symphony Hall on Sunday, April 13, at 2:30, the orchestra will combine with the much trained Harvard Glee Club of 100 men to give a program memorable in proportions and interesting in character.
LOEW'S GLOBE THEATRE
Elsie Hammerstein will head the bill for the initial half of the coming week at Loew's Globe Theatre. What a treat for the audience! She will appear in "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes," which is rich in love and romance, with a theme of mystery running through it.

- (3) To deprive the President of the power of patronage; to put all public offices as nearly as possible under Civil Service, and have appointments made by a committee of Congress.
- (4) To elect Federal Judges, including the Supreme Court Justices, by popular vote.
- (5) To apply the Initiative, the Referendum and the Recall to national matters.

How to Make Service in Army Efficient and Attractive

Since Congress has been considering plans for the future of the army, we have received many letters from former service men suggesting changes. Some have criticized severely the present system of courts-martial. Others have urged that no man can be a good officer who has not served in the ranks and thus acquired at first hand the point of view of those he must command. But all agree that our army needs somehow to be humanized.

One exceptionally clear letter by a former officer who had served in the War Department at Washington, at a home camp, at the front in France, and, for a time, with the General Staff, G. H. Q., A. E. F., merits quotation. This officer writes:

The present trouble is primarily due to the fact that the army officer has practically no direct contact with civilians and does not understand the civilian attitude; that since promotion is by seniority there is no incentive to do anything outside of the requisite routine duties; and, since the only thing which will delay promotion is "making a break," officers carefully avoid anything new or not directly in their routine.

To remedy these conditions it is obvious that the same system of reward for good work that makes civilian organization efficient must obtain in the army, and that the soldier and the civilian must be rubbed together to appreciate each other's viewpoints. This can be accomplished by:

- (a) Promotion only by demonstrated efficiency.
- (b) Elimination of loafing, unfit officers.
- (c) Raising the pay of the higher grades.
- (d) Detailing officers to civilian establishments.
- (e) Detailing civilians (reserve officers) to work with the army.

These points are all covered by the Wadsworth bill, which provides an efficient and not unduly expensive nucleus for an army that could be expanded quickly in case of need.

The bill favored by the House Committee on Military Affairs ignores them all. It would restore the old type of regular army, with promotion by seniority, no universal training, and no special provision for contact with civilian life. Our correspondent truly adds:

Failure to create conditions which will reawaken ambition in the regular army will result in a lack of vigorous and effective administration of army affairs, which means bad handling of junior officers and men and bad management of the finances, so that the cost of a small poor army will exceed that of a large and good one.

This newspaper has heretofore stressed the need of adequate pay among officers in army, navy and other specialized services. That is imperative if competent workers are to be attracted and kept.

It is, however, equally important that conspicuous ability shall be recognized and rewarded. One factor specially in need of encouragement in both army and navy is the power of the officer to win the confidence of his men.

Promotion by seniority utterly ignores personal fitness to command. Under it, the step-watching martinet, who views men beneath him in rank as dust beneath his feet, has equal reward with the resourceful, humane and democratic officer who rules as much by affection as by force.

After the experience that 4,000,000 young Americans have just had of army life, no American army can be recruited in the near future on a volunteer basis unless the Prussian spirit of traditional army control gives place to a more democratic and co-operative spirit. Our sons will not serve except by draft where the great majority of them are distrusted, ignored or humiliated.

The success of the House plan of army reorganization would give the country a costly failure. The Senate plan is vastly preferable.

The Starving of Ministers Halting Moral Progress

In every normal person there is a soul which hungers after righteousness. Neither the individual nor the community life is complete without stimulus of its moral energies.

The trolley car would not run if the powerhouse were shut down or the communications broken. The church is the powerhouse and religion the motive power of moral progress. Let us be careful how we waste useful energy.

Today our country is confronted with a slowing down and may have to face the shutting off of much of its religious power. The church, through its ministry, is being starved out. Readjustment of incomes to meet abnormal costs has gone far, but it has not yet reached the bulk of the clergy. Never well paid, these servants of humanity are just now undergoing economic crucifixion.

Practically every other group has organized to exact a living wage. Preachers as a class are meek. They suffer and are silent. But many are being forced into other lines of work, and their going leaves a gap in society's equipment for the future.

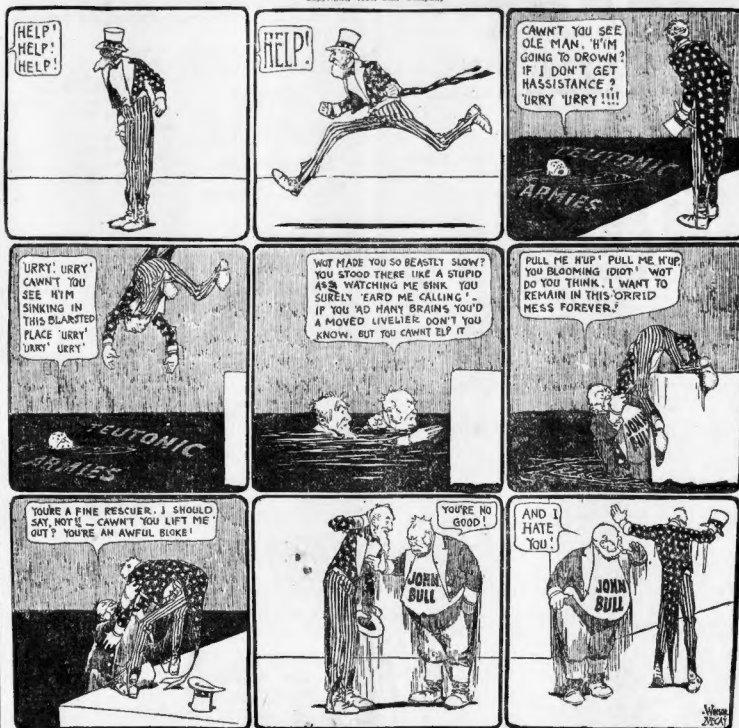

This, of course, is not a new story. It has been told before. But it is our duty to understand what it means. It means moral decay unless soon remedied. And moral decay is not something that good Americans want to have happen in this clear land of ours.

This newspaper believes it is incumbent upon everybody who values morals to lend a hand to strengthen the institutions of religious training. The first step necessary is to make the ministry attractive to men with a capacity for moral leadership.

That cannot be done on a basis of starvation pay.

First Photos of Interior of Summer White House

The Boston Sunday Advertiser will present to its readers tomorrow the first photographs to be taken of the interior of the Crane mansion at Juniper Point, which is to be the Summer White House.

These exclusive photographs were taken by special authority granted to that newspaper and give a remarkably fine idea of the quarters which are to be President Wilson's during his stay in Massachusetts.

Accompanying the photographs is an article describing in detail the simple yet luxurious home.

Major-General Clarence R. Edwards, commander of the Northeastern Department of the army and leader of the famous Yankee Division in France, has written for the Boston Sunday Advertiser an article pointing out the need of universal training. "The greatest menace to the United States," declares Major-General Edwards, "is its irresponsible, undisciplined youth. Universal training for real citizenship is a panacea for this situation."

Two Boston men are leaders in a movement to revive the commerce of the world. Their plans are fully outlined in a special article.

Senator Capper of Kansas, in a signed article, says: "Profit hogging in lumber has stopped the building of 1,000,000 homes." He advocates full terms for profiters and says there are laws enough to "enable the consumer to give every consumer a square deal." Unless this is done, the senator says, critical times are ahead for the country.

Letters to the Editor

Land No Use

Editor Boston American:

I have been following for some time the action of Congress in reference to the bonus for ex-servicemen. It seems to me that they are trying to avoid giving the former soldiers, sailors and marines a chance to get back on their feet again.

I am an ex-serviceman who lost everything I had in the world while serving with the colors. Congress seems to favor a land grant to ex-servicemen. Kindly tell me what use could a land grant be to me or any other like me, who have always lived in the city and know absolutely nothing about farming and haven't even got enough money to pay railroad fares to somewhere in the West, where land is plentiful but money scarce.

If that is the best that Congress can do for the men who were willing to sacrifice their lives it called upon to do so, kindly tell me where they expect to get their next army and navy in case of trouble during the next few years. Perhaps some of the congressmen might like to go instead.

AN EX-SERVICEMAN.

Democrat for Johnson

Editor Boston American:

It was indeed a great pleasure for me to read your interesting article on Senator Johnson of California. I consider him a regular nominee. He is a diplomat in the true sense of the word, and you cannot say the same about the other men mentioned for President. I am a member of the American Legion, and I have heard many good things about Senator Johnson. He will be able to secure thousands of Democratic votes, and I, as a life-long Democrat, will take great pleasure in casting my vote for Hiram Johnson of California. We want a President who will consider America first, last and always. May the Boston American keep up the good work in upholding a man who is not lacking in Presidential qualifications. JAMES M. PRESTON.

Broad Views

Editor Boston American:

Senator Johnson needs no glamour of military glory to strengthen his cause. He is a man of substantial power, of broad views and determined purpose. He appeals to the intelligence of the thinking voters of his country, and not to the imaginations of those who must always have a glittering bauble dancing before their eyes to distract their vision. PREPARING FOR THE FUTURE

How far ahead do you look planning your study and work in this world?

Just because you have no opportunity today to use the knowledge you are gleaming each day, do you get discouraged and say it is not worth while to know anything well, because if you did you would never get a chance to use it?

Disabuse your mind of such notions.

Keep right on preparing yourself thoroughly for whatever you find you like well enough to concentrate on systematically.

Oh, you "like so many things," and so you do nothing well.

That is the case with a good many people, they like too many things and cannot find time to do any of them well.

Sit down today and try to look your life through from its beginning to its possible end.

If you had no interest in the matter other than to choose what you would do, what would you like most to have accomplished in your lifetime?

What would you like to do best?

What would you like to do best?

What would you like to do best?

What would you like to do best?

What would you like to do best?

What would you like to do best?

What would you like to do best?

What would you like to do best?

What would you like to do best?

What would you like to do best?

What would you like to do best?

What would you like to do best?

What would you like to do best?

More Truth Than Poetry

A Song of Hate

By S. E. KISER

I'd hate to be the man who began the recent war,
I'd hate to be so fat they'd call me "Fatty";
I'd hate to be a crusty and a rusty bachelorette
On an island with an old maid who was catty.
I would hate to think I made others cheerless or afraid,
I'd hate to have to be a prince's flunkiey.
And I'd soon grow sick of life if I had a silly wife
Who lavished her affection on a monkey.

I'd hate to have a job as an inky rubber stamp,
Even though they called me "Mister Secretary";
I would hate to be the sad, silent victim of a vamp
Or the valet of a mangy dromedary;
I'd hate to have the fear that must haunt the profiteer
Who believes the Bolshevik will rule our nation;
I would hate to drive a hearse, but I'd hate it even worse
If I drove my fellow men to desperation.

I'd hate to think I thought when I didn't think at all—
A trouble by which most men are affected—
And I'd hate to be so busy being nuts about baseball
That I couldn't keep my faculties collected;
I'd hate to be so keen to get rich that I'd be mean
And engaged in doing things that were unlawful,
And I'd hate to have to live, while the prices are so high,
To live a double life—it must be awful.

REASON: TREASON!

It is difficult to get skepticism stamped out. Even now there are people who refuse to believe that the ideal form of government exists where a man is sent to jail for stealing an apple, while another, who causes babies to die of starvation, sends word to the court officials who want to question him that he is too busy to be bothered, and they may talk to his lawyer.

MUST HAVE PROFIT

Some men never are willing until they have tried it themselves to believe that it is foolish to fool with rusty guns and play poker with strangers.

Dear K. C. B.—It seems to me that if any person has a streak of good or bad luck they usually let you hear about it. So now, here I am, hoping to hear what you have in answer to mine.

I want to tell you that in all the years of my life I have never been as happy as I am now. I am discharged from the navy. I've got to be free again. I can laugh, talk and enjoy things, all of which I was previously deprived of. I read about that ex-convict who wrote to you saying that he was very disappointed because he couldn't get so work, and would probably have to go back to his old tricks.

Take me, for instance. If ever I could get work and thought I would have to go back to the navy I would sooner shoot myself.

Take a look at how and what people said of the navy. "Oh, those men just joined so they could escape the draft." And those men, some of them are down in Davy Jones's locker, and did just as good as the fellows who fought at Chateau Thierry. Although some of the people never knew that sailors were fighting on land also, some of whom were at the big fourteen-inch guns in answer to the German's big Bertha are some were also in the aviation, in which I spent eleven months of my four years.

C. B., I'll tell the world it sure is fine to get out and only have to work eight hours a day, when we used to work on a job till we were finished on the U. S. S. New Mexico, even if it took twenty-four hours. I was just sixteen when I went in the navy. I didn't know any better. I remain always, your regular reader,

L. M. JACOBSEN,

Los Angeles, Cal.

MY DEAR Jaks.

AND HERE you're glad.

I'VE BEEN going around.

LOOKING AT the pictures.

ALL OVER the country.

SHOWING OUR sailors.

ON NICE big ships.

LAYING IN the harbors.

OF FOREIGN countries.

AND Lots of time.

ON COLD Winter days.

I'VE STOPPED to look.

AT the colored posters.

THAT THEY always put up.

IN THE Winter time.

SHOWING UNCLE Sam's sailors.

ALL DRESSED in white.

SITTING UNDER palm trees.

IN SOME warm country.

AND OUT in the bay.

WITH THE Stars and Stripes.

AND ALL the time.

MY ONE regret.

WAS THAT I'VE seen.

WOULDN'T let me go.

AND JOIN the NAVY.

"AND see the world."

AND NOW you come.

AND NOW you come.

AND NOW you come.

AND NOW you come.
